BILLY SUNDAY AND

THE MODERN WOMEN.

A recent sermon of Billy Sunday's was from the text, "Is it Well With Thee; Is it Well With Thy Husband; Is it Well With Thy Child." Sunday said that the devil and women can ruin the world and Jesus and women can save the world. "I believe," said Billy, "that there is something unfinished in the makeup of a girl who lacks religion. The average girl of today no longer looks forward to motherhood as the crowning glory of womanhood."

"She is turning her home into a gambling shop and a beer and champagne drinking joint, and her society is made up of poker players, beer-drinkers, grass widowers, jilted jades and slander mongers—that mixture comprises the society of the average girl of today. She is becoming a matinee gagger and a fudge eater."

"I wish I could make a girl who flirts see herself as others see her. If you make eyes at a man on the street he will pay you back. It doesn't mean that you are pretty. It means that if you don't care any more for yourself than that, why should he? The average man will take a girl at her personal estimate of herself."

"Why don't you women start a dress reform—for the women, for the women and by the women. I am not a crank. I don't want you to dress like my mother did, with hoops sticking out, but I want you to cover yourselves up when you go out on the streets. Why, a man with red blood in his veins can't look at half the women on the streets now and not have impure thoughts."

"Whatever you do, girls, don't transfer the love that God gave you, of being stow in on some husband's right in their place, but their place is out in the kennel."

GETTING THE BUSINESS OF NEW PEOPLE.

One reason why the advertising game is such a leading factor in modern business is that population is so constantly changing.

Years ago people used to settle down in one place and live there all their lives. Having grown up in a place, they knew all the merchants and they knew they had some idea as to who was enterprising and alert and who was slow and indifferent. Advertising was useful then, but not so wholly necessary now. But many merchants are still trying to do business as if these conditions still existed.

Nowadays the population of most towns is very fluctuating. If a store is satisfied merely to keep its old customers, it finds that a certain proportion die off each year. A portion have moved elsewhere. Meanwhile a constant influx of new people come in. It is a common remark, even in small places, that the town is full of new faces.

When a new family comes in, they immediately want to know where to trade. They know nothing of the history or reputation of the merchants. The first thing they do is to buy a newspaper and find out what stores are advertising. Usually they open up accounts with merchants whose notices they have read.

A man may have done business for a lifetime in his old location, all of it honorable trade. He may have given good value all these years, and have an established circle of patrons. The newcomer knows nothing of all this. Indeed he is a little suspicious of old established firms, knowing that sometimes they live on old established reputations.

Business relations made with newcomers through advertising realizes the necessity of making good promises he puts into print. He gets the cream of the new trade, and wins the friendship of the new people, who to less enterprising merchants are wholly strangers.

MOTHER'S BIRTHDAY.

In a rural school a few days ago the teacher—a young man just out of normal school—his pupils, one by one, to tell what each believed to be the greatest day in the year. The answers were piped up promptly, "Washington's Birthday," "Christmas," "The Fourth," "Thanksgiving," and so on.

"But I'm afraid you're all wrong," said the instructor. "The greatest of all days in the year is mother's birthday."

We're sorry we haven't a chance here to tell just how much we think of that young man. Suffice it to say that such teachers are the crying need not of our rural schools, but of our higher institutions of the city. For if those youngsters learn no more than what mother really means they will not have trudged miles to the little frame schoolhouse for naught.

We fear we are all pupils more or less when it comes to learning our duty and obligations to mother. Whether we're separated from her by land or sea we can always feel her influence, and we can always find that tie of love that links us ever to her blessed soul. Wouldn't it be a better world if we all tried to make mother's birthday the greatest of all days? Let's try it.

NORTH LOVELL.

Mrs. Sophia K. McAllister.

Mrs. Sophia K. McAllister passed away at her home here April 5. She suffered severely, but was very patient and cheerful, making no complaint, even when the pain was hardest. She received the tenderest care from her daughters and every thing was done for her recovery, but was of no avail.

She was the daughter of Ephraim and Nancy (Johnson) McKeen, and was born in Stoneham, 81 years ago last November. In 1855 she married Gorton McAllister. From this union was born eleven children, six of them survive her, two sons, A. J. of Bemis and Gorham of North Lovell, four daughters, Mrs. Cora Butters of East Stoneham, Mrs. Viola Stone, Lockes Mills, Mrs. Lottie Butters of Albany and Miss Butters of North Lovell, and twenty-five grandchildren. They will all miss her care and thoughtfulness for their comfort for she was a devoted mother, kind and cheerful friend. Place Eyes of Beans Down.

In planting any kind of beans, but more especially the Lima bean, it will pay to take a little more time and place the bean in the earth with the eye down, as the root is formed from the eye, and the bean pushed up through the soil to the light, where leaves and the vine appear to unfold from the bean.

It has been found that three to six days are frequently gained in using this method, and the plants are stronger, as they do not have to use any of their force in turning the bean over, or turning up to the light of day. Try the experiment and watch for yourself.

GENERAL NEAL DOW.

Our musters, attendance at which was obligatory upon all the enrolled militia, were little else than burlesque occasions or days for drunkenness, and much that was worse. Position in line was by no means confined to uniformed companies. There was on hand, to be sure, in all their finery, with much fuss and parade, their commanders resplendent in feather and epaulettes and whatever else of glittering tinsel they could attach to their persons. But however creditable their appearance, it served only as a foil to the mass of the militia gathered from far and near in every conceivable garb, often purposely made to excite amusement and ridicule.

Gen. Dow says: "I recall a laughable incident in connection with one of these occasions. In the band, on the right of the column, was a little short-legged bass drummer, whose head and feet were visible respectively above and below his big drum, which absolutely concealed from those in front the rest of his person. As those days hogs ran as freely through the streets as dogs do now, and were more numerous. One of these animals, frightened by something, running from one side of the street to the other, dashed between the legs of the little drummer, and taking him off his feet, carried him, drum and all, until he threw him off at some distance in advance of the procession."

This incident was hardly more ridiculous than some of the evolutions performed in good faith at these musters, which did nothing to fit those who mustered, in them for soldiers, but much to disqualify many for good citizenship. They were often the occasion of most disgraceful exhibitions of drunkenness. When not more than twelve years of age, I pulled a boy, not older than myself, to the sidewalk from the street where he had fallen, drunk with liquor obtained from one of the sutler's tents, at that time invariably surrounding muster-fields. At another muster, to my intense horror and disgust, I was fallen on and held down by a drunken man. The feeling then engendered was ever after associated in my mind with those gala-days of the old time militia.

Every old volunteer fireman in the country can see by that extract that the spirit which bred the craft had possession of me—quite willing, I think, to meet a fire to have it occur when and where one could attend it.

Gen. Dow says that while Captain of the Deluge Engine Company, an incident occurred of some local import that may illustrate the general lack of reverence upon the "watch" of the day. In the heat of the earlier anti-slavery excitement, a meeting had been announced to be held in the Friends' Church, to be addressed by some anti-slavery speakers from Massachusetts, and it became known that an attempt would be made to mob it. The mayor asked me to be present and to assist in preserving order, the watch being entirely inadequate to cope with the impending emergency.

I immediately suggested a plan through which I could guarantee the protection of the meeting and obtained his approval. I sent messengers to summon to the engine house at an early hour some thirty or forty of the members of my engine company upon whose pluck, discretion and loyalty to myself I could fully rely. At the hour appointed, I met them there, and briefly stated my intention to prevent a crowd of roughs from interfering with the contemplated anti-slavery meeting. They decided to a man to sustain me, and I led them quietly to the meeting-house, and into the aisle, where we arrived in good season, and formed in two lines, leaving a passage between so that everybody disposed could pass to take seats.

The house was soon crowded, the would-be rioters evidently mistaking some of my head for their sympathizers. I sat at the head of my "column" of firemen, near the speakers. Next to me were two of my company whom I had selected for the head of the line—men of unusual physique, strength and agility, of undoubted pluck and determination. By this time half a dozen of the roughs had worked their way to the front, close to the speakers, ready to open the "fun" they were to enjoy.

The first speaker had not occupied the floor more than a minute before one of these "toughs" shouted, with an oath, "Don't tread on my toes!" "Take care of that fellow!" I ordered. My two stout fire-leaders seized him by the collar, and he went down that aisle and out of the door like a projectile from a catapult. "Number Seven, do not hurt next order, and everything was as quiet and orderly throughout the gathering. At its close the company furnished a guard for the speakers to their respective dwellings, and what threatened to be a disgrace to the city was suppressed by the foresight of the mayor and the good discipline and love of order of my old Deluge Engine Company.

Gen. Dow says: "At a dinner of one of the engine companies which as Chief Engineer I attended, the toastmaster, as upon temporarily opposed to my views in drunk in cold water," he said, "of anything more appropriate and acceptable to him who is to respond to it." Holding his glass of water aloft, and attracting attention not more by his stentorian voice than by his towering figure (he was two or three inches over six feet in height) he turned to me and said: "Mr. Chief, I ask you to respond to this toast: 'Brandy and water—water for the fire, and brandy for the firemen.'" Naturally there were loud shouts, and the vociferous cheering, largely ironical, a small minority, I dare say, sympathizers with my views, I rose to respond. I tried to keep the company in good nature that it might listen, as it did with respect, while I improved the opportunity to enable me naturally to close with another toast as follows: "Brandy and water—water extinguishes fire, and brandy extinguishes firemen."

A formidable movement for my dismissal from the position, taking advantage of a time when the city government was in the hands of the Democrats, while I was a Whig, petitions asking for my removal were prepared and presented for signature at all the hotels and liquor shops in town. They were numerous signed by a day was appointed by the mayor and aldermen for a hearing. The instigators of the movement had engaged one of the ablest lawyers in town, a man of great native ability and bravery, as an orator, but whose opportunities for usefulness were cut off by his untimely death.

He was charged with being arbitrary and despotic, as being unskilled in the management of men, and generally incompetent. A number of witnesses were called in the department best known to differ with me in theory and practice as to the use of intoxicants, it having been granted for granted, without a preliminary examination, that they would testify against me. One put upon the stand was a jolly good fellow, the toast-master for the occasion, who professed little sympathy for temperance. He was connected with a most respectable family, and of which of which was inimical to the developing reform movement. Because of this the liquor interests depended upon him as a valuable witness for its purpose.

With that particular manner assumed by some lawyers when they call an important witness, with a pose and an adjusting of the waistcoat, a smile and an air seeming to say, "Now see what I am going to do," the counsel for the petitioners, after the preliminary questions and replies tending to show his witness qualified to testify as an expert said: "Now Mr. State your opinion of the skill and ability of the Chief." The reply excited shouts of laughter because so unexpected by the counsel as to completely astonish him. It was in substance, "My opinion is that he knows how to handle men as well as any, and that we have no better fireman among us."

I digress here to relate another incident in which this witness surprised some of his associates. Years after the event recorded, when his appetite for liquor had so far increased that he was much under its control, he, with several others was called to testify as an expert case under the Maine Law against a notorious liquor dealer whose regular customers they were supposed to be. The new law was regarded by many as an invasion of private rights, so outrageous, some said, that even reputable men pretended to believe that perjury when necessary to protect liquor dealers, was proper. Witness after witness who had been seen by officers going in and out of the store of the respondent testified that any liquor sold, drank, or seen there. Finally our toast-master was called. He admitted that he had bought and drank it there, and had seen others do the same. The conviction of the liquor seller followed. The violator of the law afterwards complained to the witness of what he called his treachery, but the latter replied: "I have paid you for all the liquor I have bought in your shop, and made no promise, express or implied, to lie about it, or perjure myself on your account."

By a curious coincidence the lawyer who was prosecuting the charges against me before the board of aldermen was also called as a witness in this case. He objected to answering the questions asked by the county attorney on the ground, first, as he said, that it was an invasion of his personal constitution; if he might be asked what he drank, he urged, they must also ask what he wore, ate, etc.; second, that he could not answer the question affirmatively, without exposing himself to ridicule, abuse, and loss of business; third, that if he should answer affirmatively, he would criminate himself, as he regarded it a misdemeanor for a person to procure the violation of law by another. The position he took was argued two and on by the counsel for the liquor dealer on the one side and the county attorney, on the other. Finally the judge decided that the questions must be answered.

Gen. Dow says: "While I was mayor I attended a fire and I saw a fireman so drunk, he could not climb a ladder. I ordered a policeman to take to the policeman, and I took his place myself. The chief was much surprised when he called his force from the roof to find that the mayor of the city was one of them."

FARMERS AND DUDELETS.

"Oh, he's just a farmer out here in the country."

We stood on a street corner the other day and heard that remark passed by one of the "brilliant" young masculine striplings of our town as he "hummed" the "makings" from a friend.

The farmer, to be sure, was just a farmer out here in the country. He wore overalls and drove his wagon into town, but at home his automobile rested snugly in the garage. He owned one of the most valuable farms in this section of the State. His home life is ideal and his wife and children have everything they desire. His simple word is as good as a check, and his check would be honored for a sum that might stagger you.

He is a man, a real man, a man whom other men acknowledge to be a man among men, even if he is "just a farmer out here in the country."

But what of the stripling, what of the dudelet?

He is just one of that numerous class who always know everything and never do anything, who amount to nothing and are worth less. He is just a dudelet and it is doubtful if he ever attains to the "dignity" of being a real dude.

Yes, he is "just a farmer out here in the country," but he is our friend, he is everybody's friend, and time may prove him to be the "friend in need" of the poor, rapid, brainless dudelet.

We need a thousand more just like him—this man who is "just a farmer out here in the country," and whom we are proud to know as our friend.

Poor, deluded dudelet! May he never be worse!

MAINE ROADS.

Warnings have been issued by the Maine Automobile Association regarding the present condition of all highways throughout the State outside of city streets and improved roads of the so-called permanent type. At the present time the frost is coming out of the ground and automobilists are very likely to get mixed and possibly to sustain serious damage to their machines on account of the bad road conditions. The majority of people undoubtedly are aware of this fact, but so anxious is the average motorist to get out in the spring that he takes a chance and in a majority of cases has to suffer the consequences. Reports received by the Touring Bureau of the Maine A. A. indicate that the majority of unimproved roads are now in bad condition and should be avoided for the next two weeks at least.

The improved roads, built by the State Highway Department throughout Maine have come through the winter in excellent condition. Many of them have "heaved up" considerably but the State's engineers who have now inspected the majority of them, report that these conditions are not serious and the spots will return to their normal shape after the frost gets out of the ground. When a few bad breaks have resulted from the exceptionally severe winter can easily be repaired without great cost.

The Highway Commission is also making preparations on all of its State road work to begin operations just as soon as the frost comes out of the ground and conditions will permit.

GERMANY'S PATENT DYES.

All the world, or the greatest part of it, knows that Germany makes better dyes than are made elsewhere. Its scientific men have worked out the problem of making them from coal tar products by which they obtain the most brilliant, beautiful and lasting colors yet made, and which have not been equalled by the makers of any other country.

When the shortage began to make itself known in this country, after the supply was stopped by the war, it was proposed that we get busy and make them in this country, but that was easier said than done. The process of making them is a complicated one and requires workmen who have been educated to the work, as well as large plants of machinery and apparatus for producing the materials of which the dyes are made. Of course we can work it out in time, but that does not help us now. We used to make certain colors before the Germans made so much better ones, but we cannot even do that now.

The mills that made them were put out of business by the new colors, and have been transformed into something else or abandoned, and even the indigo, and logwood, and other materials that were used cannot be obtained now in quantities enough to amount to anything, so that the country is badly off so far as getting dyes is concerned. Our patent law is partly responsible for it. Other nations when granting patents to foreigners require that the articles patented shall be manufactured in the country granting the patent. The United States gives a foreigner a patent without any such requirement.

The German colors are patented in this country, but they have not been manufactured here. If the patent had required that they should be, there probably would have been at least one factory here, and if there had been there, they would have been people who would be capable of manufacturing them, and in fact there would have been no break in the supply on account of the war.

As long as other nations require the manufacture in their countries of the things they patent, it would be no more than fair for us to do the same, and in this particular case it would have been worth a good deal to this country. America is behind; shown a lot of things by the war that it didn't know before, and by the beginning to have some doubts about its being the smartest race of people on the face of the earth.—Reporter-Journal.

WHY LUMBER COSTS HIGH.

This is a time of year when timber lands in most of the states are as dry as a bone. They are a perfect tinder box for the locomotive spark or the camper's fire.

When people build houses they complain bitterly about the high cost of this wood material. A principal cause of this cost is the frequency of forest fires. The same man who kicks strenuously over the building contractor's bill, may go on some fishing trip and throw away a match into a pile of dead leaves.

The uncertainty of woodland property has led to the feeling that it is an undesirable form of investment. It costs so much to insure woodlands that few owners try to cover it. Even if the tract is located in some remote place, there is still a risk which owners hate to take. They therefore cut down their trees before they are ripe. The result is the young growth of forest fires, which is coming along for the future. If the land can possibly be made available for any other purpose, they so utilize it. Thus the timber area is fast shrinking.

Public sentiment should support strict laws controlling these hazards. The farmer who would like to see young brush grow up into timber should be given some protection for it. In many states serious fires are now largely prevented by watch towers, from which scouts can detect a blaze when it first starts and telephone local fire wardens or rangers. The secret of successful forest fire fighting is just the same as for town fire fighting. It is to get to the spot before the fire has great headway.

Every man who enters a woodland tract on a fishing or hunting trip or for any other purpose, should realize that he is a fire peril. He is a guest in one of the nation's storehouses of wealth. His thoughtless act may consume millions of worth of property and contribute toward the expense of living and doing business.

VARIOUS POULTRY DISHES.

Chicken and game are regarded in many families as luxuries to be reserved for the holidays, but these articles of food can be so prepared that each may serve for several meals. A well stuffed chicken, flanked with a ring of sausage meat balls or small fried sausages, is more appetizing than if served alone and will be sufficient for two meals.

Baked chicken and eggs is another dish that is not so popular. For the latter take a cold or canned chicken, chop the eggs fine. Make a sauce of butter, mixed with flour and seasoning, and add a little stock. Let this boil up and add a third of it to the eggs and the rest to the chicken. Arrange in a buttered baking dish in alternate layers and bake half an hour in a moderate oven.

STEVENSON'S KINDNESS.

Robert Louis Stevenson detected cruelty, and many pretty instances of kindness of heart. Once, the great novelist interfered to stop the ill-treatment of a dog. "What business is it of yours?" the man retorted, roughly. "He ain't your dog," "No, but he's God's dog," Stevenson declared stoutly, "and I'm here to protect him."

BETHEL.

Rescript from Law Court.
Lillian T. Dinsmore, plaintiff, vs. Guy L. Thurston, defendant.

This is an action to recover damages because of the defendant's breach of promise to marry the plaintiff. The verdict was for the plaintiff and the damages were assessed at $7500. The case is before this court upon defendant's motion to set aside the verdict and is urged because the damages awarded are excessive.

The plaintiff is a trained nurse, 35 years old. The defendant is 49 years old, the postmaster at Bethel and proprietor of a country store and was divorced from his wife, for her fault, in October previous to his meeting the plaintiff in March or April, at which time the defendant was ill and the nurse who was attending him left and the attending physician sent for the plaintiff. The plaintiff attended him from ten days to two weeks and returned to Portland. There was some correspondence between them before the engagement was broken was made. The plaintiff visited Bethel two or three times, during which visits the defendant paid her considerable attention. He also visited her at Portland several times and on the fifth or sixth of August, they became engaged and afterwards the defendant presented her with a diamond ring and she sent out notices of their engagement. The engagement continued for 28 or 29 months, when the defendant broke it and notified the plaintiff that he could not marry her. The plaintiff was entitled to recover just compensation for her loss and damages by reason of breaking of the engagement, not damages as a punishment for the defendant's breach of his contract, as clearly stated by the presiding justice in his charge. The damages should have been computed on the principal of indemnity and reasonable compensation for the plaintiff's loss by reason of the breach of the promise of marriage, and the jury had a right to consider the loss to her by reason of the disappointment of her reasonable expectations—the money value or worldly advantage to her of a marriage with defendant; also the wounds and injury to her affections caused by the rejection and the distress of mind and mortification that she had suffered as a result of the defendant's breach of faith in breaking his promise to marry her; also the financial worth of the defendant. Hick vs. Kimball, 109 Maine, 433.

A careful reading of the evidence clearly shows that the jury in the assessment of damages either misapprehended or disregarded the rule of damages as stated to them by the presiding justice, as a careful reading of the evidence shows it is impossible to believe that $7500 was not excessive damages. How much was to be determined, but it is the opinion of the court that the extreme amount should not have exceeded $3,000.

If the plaintiff files a remitter of all above $3,000, the mandate will be "Motion overruled;" otherwise, "Motion sustained and new trial granted."

A Golden Wedding.

A celebration of the 50th anniversary of the marriage of Porter M. and Eunice (Monroe) Glines on Wednesday, April 12.

The happy event came off at the home of the aged pair which was the home of Mrs. Glines in the years before her marriage, being the homestead and residence of her parents, Merrick and Betsy (Brown) Monroe and where a number of their numerous family of sons and daughters were born and reared to maturity.

It is the distinct recollection of Mrs. Glines, now in her 72nd year, that at the time of her marriage in 1866, the spring was much more advanced than this year, that the ground was green with grass, and many farmers had planted gardens and fields, which, on account of adverse changes of weather, had to be replanted.

Mr. and Mrs. Glines first settled in a pleasant home in the Glines neighborhood in North Bridgton, where, early in her married life, she became the subject of a disease, from the effects of which she has been for many years suffering invalid and an object of the sympathy of all her friends. Mr. Glines who has all these years enjoyed good health, has displayed the greatest degree of kindness and devotion to his wife, and has been a most devoted companion, and during the many years of their residence here, they have continued to grow into the respect and affection of all who knew them.

The movement for the observance of the late anniversary was carried out in an excellent effect by a number of ladies of the village in combination with some of the friends of the family in distant places, the results of which were apparent on the date of the celebration, when a good number of neighbors interested in the affair assembled at the Glines residence and spent an agreeable hour or two in social congratulatory intercourse in admiration and discussion of the many beautiful gifts contributed as tokens of the affection of relatives and neighbors. Of these the following is a list:

Fore Street.

The Circle will meet with Mrs. Arthur Talbot, Thursday afternoon.

History of Fore Street Sewing Circle. When first the sewing circle met. The day was bright and sunny; The ladies brought but little sewing, And no one thought it funny.

For then our circle was but a name, And only just begun to grow; They went to do their mending, But soon they grew so true.

Kettie Cummings and her mother Were the first ones to arrive; But they wouldn't been so early, If George hadn't gone to drive.

Mildred Twitchell came on foot; Then Lora and her mother, And all at hand, they were brought, Were not considered bother.

Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. Stanton, And Harriet Moring had been; And she did it right in style. They ate her oranges, drank her punch, And she did it right in style.

To help out on this day, They knew they couldn't hold the circle, Without Oscar, Arthur and Luther Neil. A week rolled by and then we met, Mr. and Mildred entertained. We ate fudge and peanuts and discussed What we had lost and gained.

Two charter members absent, And surely was a shame; So on the Secretary's books, we had To put a black mark by their name.

But first new ones came to join us, And we were, oh, so glad, For if our numbers had decreased, 'Twould made all of us feel bad.

Next time we meet with Lora, We hope a larger crowd, For to join this sewing circle, Should make anyone feel proud.

The kindergarten too we'll look for, And you'll say they're not so guilty, If you should see the youngsters, That grow upon this street.

We hope the circle keeps on growing, And visits up the street, For then they'll be at Sunnyside, With Holstein milk for treat.
